

PRAY FOR

THE JULA OF BURKINA FASO

Have you ever traded candy, baseballs cards, or minifigures with your friends? If you have, you might know how fun and exciting it can be to give something up that belongs to you in exchange for something you might like even better. Well, can you imagine this being your fulltime job and being well-known for being really good at it?

There is an entire people group of 2 million whose very name means “journeying trader.” This people group lives in the southwestern part of Burkina Faso, a country in West Africa. These clever traders are also an unreached, unengaged people group, which means there are VERY few, if any believers of the true gospel among them. They are mostly Muslim. In fact, being Muslim is an important part of who they are. Their Muslim identity affects everything – what they believe, what they do, what they drink, and even what they eat. While it would be very difficult for the Jula to believe the gospel, they are open to learning and interacting with other cultures.

Would you pray that the Jula would hear the gospel? Can you imagine if some heard and believed and instead of trading goods for money they starting trading their old way of life for a new one? Would you like to grow up one day and take the best news on earth, the gospel, and share it with the Jula, but instead of getting something in return you surprise them by offering this good news as a free gift?

Don't forget to also pray for the Jula children, who just like you, might also have the chance to hear about Jesus. Maybe next time you make a trade with a friend, you stop and pray for the Jula! Their hearing and believing the gospel would be far better than any minifig you might score!
