

PRAY FOR THE
NGANDO
OF THE DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC
OF THE CONGO

Have you ever looked forward to getting a shot? Do you count down the days, marking them off one by one with huge X's across your calendar, as if you were counting down days until Christmas or a trip to Disney World? No, of course not! Want to know a little secret? Adults dread getting shots too. Well, at least I do. So, if shots are so terrible why in the world do we get them? It's not just to get a lollipop or sticker afterwards. Most of the time, you get a shot to make you better when you're sick. Or we get shots to help us not get sick in the first place. The scariness and small pain that we feel from the shot is far better than the pain you would feel from getting the disease that the shot has prevented.

There is an unreached, unengaged people group called the Ngando who live in the Democratic Republic of Congo. The Ngando are mostly farmers but because of a lack of transportation they struggle to get their crops to sell in the markets. So, most Ngando live in poverty. While the Ngando claim to be "Christian" they tend to believe things that are simply unchristian. Like, for instance, some believe that Jesus is a god for "white people" only and there's a different god named Kitawala, that's only for "black people." They also believe that giving shots to children, like the ones you dread getting from the doctor, is a white man's sneaky plot to kill African children!

Let's pray for the Ngando. Pray that they will have an opportunity to meet Jesus. And not the Jesus that they have falsely identified as a white man's god, but the true Savior of the world and the hope for ALL nations, no matter what the color of our skin is.

Don't forget to pray for the Ngando children, too! Pray that they might have a chance to hear the gospel and receive the cure for their sin. It's not just a white man's shot!